The Edmonton Triennial was truly a fantastic gathering where spiritual refreshment was found in gathering together as the NAB family. Now, though, is the time to open the doors of the past and to walk forward and journey with God to fulfill the mission that He has for the NAB in the coming three years.

When we were brainstorming the theme for this edition of Onward, we knew we wanted to touch on Triennial 2018, but we didn't want to simply recap or rehash the ways God's Spirit moved among us; we also wanted to look forward toward the ways God is continuing to move among us and guide the ministries of the NAB, our churches, and our partnering organizations. We know that both Triennial and the exciting ministry ahead stem out of the deep work of the Holy Spirit in our conference. In the past, we've used a word or phrase to summarize the theme, but settling upon something that conveyed this duality of forces—coming out of Triennial and going into the coming years—stymied us.

This pairing—one pushing and the other pulling, but both moving us in the same direction—reminded me of the call to “come further up and further in.” This phrase comes from The Last Battle, the final novel in The Chronicles of Narnia by C. S. Lewis, which tells the story of the end of Narnia and all that led up to it, as well as all that comes after. It is this part of the book, the post-Narnia chapters, where we are given a glimpse of a new Narnia, one that is very much like the Narnia that came before, but somehow more real and more beautiful. Here in this new land, after watching the death of the old, Aslan, the High King of Narnia and Son of the Emperor-over-the-Sea, invites those who have entered this new Narnia to journey deeper into this vast garden paradise, calling out, “Come further up! Come further in!”

This call to come further up and further in was an invitation to the heroes of the tale to leave behind where they were currently—which was good—and discover the place where Aslan was drawing them to be—which was better than any of them could ever have imagined. This invitation to further up and further in is also extended to us in our daily lives by God as He calls us deeper into His plans for us as individuals and as a community.

We’ve already come a long way. Looking back at the 2015 Triennial in Sacramento, California, we were challenged with the idea that we are all missionaries in our local context, sent into our neighborhoods just as the Father sent the Son and the Son sent the Holy Spirit. For some of us, what was a new concept in 2015 is now a lived reality in 2018. This year’s Triennial continued this momentum by considering how we are to be shaped into the image of Christ to serve, in part, as sent witnesses to the Kingdom of God in our midst.

There is no denying that Triennial was good and beautiful, but we believe God has more for us than to simply sit back and celebrate all He has done in our midst. Rather, as we celebrate, let us look ahead, for there is still so much more to be done. In the same way we recall the 2015 Triennial as the starting point for where we are today, we want to look back on this Triennial in 2021 with awe at the new and grand adventures God has drawn us into.

In the following pages, you’ll read about the ways God is leading the NAB forward even as we celebrate all that has transpired.

God has been good to us, but it is time for us to go further up and further in to deepen our commitment to missional living, spiritual formation, international missions, church planting, and cross-cultural ministry.

Embracing God’s Work within Theological Education

It has been a great joy to be part of the way God is weaving together Taylor Seminary and Sioux Falls Seminary. These two institutions of the NAB are dedicated to supporting the church in fulfilling her task of teaching disciples to observe all that the Lord commanded them. Although we have taken our own unique paths to get where we are today, our journeys have shared a common trajectory. This is bringing us together and showing us in new but familiar ways that we are better together than we are apart.

Part of the journey of transformation taking place at each school has been to recognize that great strides can be made when we work together in a more integrated and intentional way. By embracing our shared call to walk alongside the church in its work to develop followers of Christ who participate in the Kingdom mission, we are finding ways to focus the journey of theological education on each person and the work of Jesus.

As theological seminaries doing our work in North America at the beginning of the twenty-first century, many of our core practices have been shaped by the same cultural forces that have shaped institutional life in general. However, as we all know, these cultural forces are changing dramatically. This reality is forcing both of our institutions to change. We embrace these changes and believe they are the work of God transforming us for the sake of the church.

Through this process, God is calling us to be better stewards of the resources that are provided to us, to be more attentive to the vocations of all the people of God—not just pastors and professional church leaders—and to make the resources collected at our institutions more accessible to those outside of our regions. Three areas in particular are setting the stage for a bright future: technology, curriculum, and student engagement.

Technology

Technology is an important aspect in all forms of education. A portion of the NAB Reach campaign was designated for Taylor Seminary and Sioux Falls Seminary for improvements in this area. Together, each seminary has worked hard to find ways for technology to enhance or support the journey of discipleship that we are creating for students.

At Taylor, these changes are taking place in a variety of ways. Upgraded technology has been added to both Stencil Hall and the classrooms. These renovations are enabling Taylor to work with students and event participants around the world. These upgrades align with similar technology already in place at Sioux Falls. As a result, it is creating opportunities for students at both schools to be in class together despite the distance between them.

With technological hardware and infrastructure in place, Sioux Falls is focused on developing software to better serve students locally and around the world. Beginning this fall, a segment of people engaged in the Kairos Project will use software that Sioux Falls helped develop. This unique software was designed from the ground up to support competency-based theological education. It is setting the stage for better interaction with and support of students engaged in a discipleship journey through theological education.

Curriculum

In fall 2014, Sioux Falls pioneered a new approach to theological education—the Kairos Project. Building on the concepts of competency-based education, the seminary blazed a new path that led to changes in curriculum, tuition prices, and the student experience, among many others. Since then, the seminary has grown by 60 percent and now has over six hundred people and ministry contexts engaged in its Kairos network around the world. The Kairos Project is now recognized as one of the most innovative and effective approaches in North America.

It was this change that sparked many of the early conversations about greater levels of partnership. As Sioux Falls began implementing these changes, the faculty at Taylor was rewriting its curriculum based on a similar competency-based approach to theological education. The faculty was deeply committed to making Taylor’s programs as relevant to the vocational callings of its students as possible. To that end, Taylor worked diligently with local pastors and ministry professionals to better direct its educational competencies and outcomes to the vocational needs of its students. These changes will now come into full effect in the next academic year, but they are already having a positive impact on the students.

Indeed, God was weaving Taylor and Sioux Falls together before we knew it was happening! Perhaps more important than the work God is doing to prepare our institutions for the future, He continues to transform the lives of our students.

Student Engagement

This past June, a Taylor graduate spoke at a national gathering of seminary leaders about the way she had been shaped at Taylor. Both Taylor and Sioux Falls were extremely pleased as she testified about how Taylor helped her more deeply understand her beliefs and how to stand strongly for her faith in a gracious, humble, generous, and Christ-like way.

That phrase, Christ-like way, might be one of the best ways to think about the work of theological education. Over the past several years, Taylor Seminary and Sioux Falls Seminary have reflected more deeply on what it looks like to develop disciples of Christ who are prepared to live fully into their unique callings within the Kingdom mission. This shift in perspective is, in most ways, a call back to the original purposes of theological education. That is to say, discipleship has always been the work of the local church, with seminaries being invited to play a role in that process through developing pastors. Today, however, the multifaceted ministry of the church calls for a multifaceted understanding of the role that seminaries play in the development of followers of Christ who live into their unique callings.

Nearly half of the students enrolled at Sioux Falls are in a professional vocation outside of a local congregation. In fact, the majority of students enrolled in seminary across North America enroll primarily because they want to learn about integrating their faith and their vocation, whatever that vocation may be. Seminary, therefore, must be a place where all members of the body of Christ can grow in their faith. One student said it best when he noted that “the heartbeat of the seminary here is that the education doesn’t give you the right to serve in ministry. The education, in fact, draws you closer to Jesus.”

Such a shift in the way students participate in theological education requires a change in how seminaries think about, approach, and engage in their work. Sioux Falls Seminary and Taylor Seminary have fully embraced this new reality and are excited about what the future holds. Together, we are better able to pursue our shared mission to develop followers of Christ.
For over 158 years, women in NAB churches have organized to meet local needs and to support the needs of women around the world. In 1860, a man at the Eastern Conference suggested that the sisters organize “work” societies to help support the church and aid in her missions. And in 1882, at the Northwestern Conference in St. Paul, Minnesota, the suggestion was made that a union of all women’s societies be formed. It wasn’t until 1907 in Buffalo, New York, during the Triennial Conference that the Women’s Missionary Union was formed.

During the early years of this organization, the focus was on prayer for our churches and missionaries and on providing for the needs of those in ministry. Women have responded generously over the years, often raising thousands of dollars to support missionaries; provide scholarships for women to attend our NAB schools in the US, Canada, and Cameroon; and meet the physical needs of women and children around the world. In 1922, White Cross work became a national women’s project to provide medical supplies for work in Cameroon.

Women’s Missionary Union became Women’s Missionary Fellowship (1979), then Women’s Ministry Fellowship (1997), and then Women’s Ministries (2004). Changes in the times, in needs, and in the opportunities that faced women drove the change in women’s work emphasis throughout the years. Individual NAB churches took on the support of missionaries, initiated compassion funds for the needs of the marginalized, and promoted growth groups, and in the process the influence of women’s ministry groups declined.

For almost two years, the present Women’s Ministry Leadership Team has wrestled with what the heart of ministry to women is in this day and age. We met with a marketing specialist, invited you to take a survey, and talked with many who are involved in ministry with women. At the recent Triennial, we unveiled the result of our seeking, research, and prayer. Based upon the desire of women to be with each other, hear life stories, and learn from other women, we have changed the name to Women’s Connection. Our bimonthly newsletter will be known as TouchPoint.
We hope that these changes will give new strength and energy to the connections we have as women in our NAB churches. What a joy it is to watch women with the same focus connect across the street, in our churches, and across time zones and international borders, sharing stories that challenge and encourage each other.

This past year we have been challenging you to connect more deeply with God through the study Enjoying Jesus offered by IF: Gathering. Through studying and applying the spiritual disciplines, we have invited you to experience a deepening relationship with God.

We will broaden our focus to include how to connect with family and friends more purposefully and will offer opportunities to connect with your community more intentionally. As we emphasize and develop these areas, we will need your help so we can share real stories of what God has done and is doing through your lives. We encourage you to respond to invitations to share your story through TouchPoint.

Members of our volunteer leadership team will be in your regions at some time during the next couple of years to hear from you and further refine and define our work among and for you. Our team was a part of a networking luncheon in the NorCal region in the spring of 2018, and more recently, in September held a luncheon for women leaders from the churches in the British Columbia Baptist Association. We would love an opportunity to meet with women leaders in your region.

Our desire is to continue to support young women in their journey in leadership roles. Women's Connection is providing grant money to attend Blue Ocean and scholarships for youth pastors’ wives to be a part of The Summit, the NAB youth leader’s retreat. We will continue to provide NAB women with tools and resources that are biblically sound and readily available. We will bring to you compassion projects like Happy Feet through our Share Your Blessing program to give your group a chance to financially make a difference.

Yes, the face of women’s ministry has changed over the last 158 years, but at the core is the desire that women must connect with other women through conversation, study, and shared experiences. As we connect, we are challenged to “encourage one another and build each other up” (1 Thessalonians 5:11 NIV). It is our joy to encourage you in your relationships and in the work you are doing where God has currently placed you.

Our Vision
Connect with women of the NAB and help them fulfill their calling.

Our Mission
Encourage the women of the NAB in their desire to serve God and provide them with valuable tools and resources to accomplish what God is calling them to do.

Our Core Values

CALLING AND WORTH
We value the essential role women play in ministry.

QUALITY RESOURCES
We value God’s Word and seek resources that are Biblically sound, applicable, and accessible.

BROADER CONNECTION
We value supporting the broader vision of the North American Baptist Conference and developing a connection among NAB women.

LEGACY AND THE FUTURE
We value the legacy of women who have gone before us and are committed to engaging the next generation.

My heart was touched with emotion when I discovered this photo of European immigrants praying on a plot of barren-looking farmland somewhere in rural Canada. Pictured with the women are Rev. R. Milbrandt and Rev. William Sturhahn, the latter an NAB pastor involved with the immigration and settlement of German refugees to Canada in the 1950s. My first thought as I viewed the photo was that their prayer was one of thanksgiving for safe travel from Europe to North America, for the soil from which they would build their lives, and for the opportunity to start over in a land offering religious freedom. However, mingled with their gratitude may have been the raw emotions of having only recently said goodbye to loved ones and their homeland. Perhaps they were standing on land where they had already buried a beloved family member or friend. In ways far too numerous to count – in good and bad times, in happy and sad times, in prosperous and challenging times, in North America and around the world – God has shown Himself to be faithful among this family we call the North American Baptist Conference.

Celebrating all God has done in this family is one of the reasons we gather at Triennials over the years. There is also the joy of connecting with many from Canada, the United States, Cameroon, and Japan. The Heritage Commission booth at Triennial was a busy place. We visited with friends who have a long history with the NAB and with those who are new to the family.

Alumni of NAB educational institutions in Edmonton and Sioux Falls shared memories of how their lives were shaped for ministry by interactions with faculty and friends. A seminary classmate and I recalled the impact that professors like Dr. Ralph Powell and Art Patzia had in our lives of faith. Helen Schmidt, a “retired” NAB missionary doctor, described to me how she continues to be a missionary even though she no longer lives in Cameroon. We answered questions and learned from those who had new stories to share. Congregations and individuals seemed anxious to share historical documents and artifacts with the Heritage Commission. Repeatedly we were reminded of the rich heritage of faith that has shaped our conference for more than 150 years.

In his report at Triennial, Dan Hamil pointed out that the Heritage Commission is now fully recognized as a partner ministry of the NAB. Located on the campus of Sioux Falls Seminary, the archives of the Heritage Commission is a well-lit and climate-controlled facility that houses hundreds of artifacts and thousands of documents related to the life and ministries of this family. With the support of the International Office, the Heritage Commission staff and volunteers are committed to preserving the history of God at work in and through the NAB.

It is important to understand, however, that the archives is more than just a museum that reminds us of the past. Our story – which is filled with examples of great leadership, innovation, and courage, as well as days of disappointment and pain – calls us to walk boldly into the future, trusting that the One who has sustained us will continue to direct our paths. In the words of the psalmist, we recall our past so that “future generations will be told about the Lord. They will proclaim his righteousness, declaring to a people yet unborn: He has done it” (Psalm 22:30–31 NIV)! In remembering and retelling our history, we also declare our confidence that God will continue to shape us for His mission in the world.
My first retreat/conference was for NAB youth workers in San Diego, California. I remember Doug Fields coming to speak to us for a couple of hours, probably about the Purpose Driven Youth Ministry. However, the highlight of the trip was the friendships that were built and bonding together while talking about life and ministry at the hotel.

The bond has grown wider and stronger with each Summit I’ve attended. The Summit has become an essential part of my life as a youth pastor every three years. When asked to join the Youth Ministry Leadership Team (YMLT) in 2009 to help plan the 2010 Summit in Asilomar, California, I was all in.

Needless to say, I cannot wait for The Summit in Phoenix, Arizona, on April 23–26, 2019.

Throughout my years on the YMLT, I have been asked why I have continued to be a part of this team for so long, and the answer is simple: The Summit. I know, The Gathering every three years brings over six hundred people to Orange County for an epic five-day mission experience that is unlike most youth trips. (Save the date, July 2020.) Don’t get me wrong, I love The Gathering, but The Summit! That’s what keeps me energized even now after transitioning to a lead pastor role.

Why, you may ask? For more than nineteen years before I took my current role, my life had been in the grind of youth ministry, daily pouring my heart into the families in our church. Like many others, we use our resources to attend conferences that are going to help our program to reach more families. However, in the midst of those conference and hours spent with other youth workers, I continue to hear the same story from youth pastors and leaders, “I’m tired. Really tired.”

This was the case when we all gathered in Galveston, Texas, for the 2016 Summit. One night we decided to do something different. We separated the men and the women and allowed for a time of sharing and prayer. That night, tears were shed, hearts were opened, and lifetime friendships were formed. The Summit is a safe opportunity to share life and ministry struggles and be motivated to continue in our calling to serve youth and families. These and many other reasons are why the NAB and the YMLT are committed to putting on a retreat that focuses on the heart and soul of the youth leader.

Our goal is to allow youth leaders around North America to take a big, long, deep breath. For those of you who are not youth leaders, encourage the youth leader at your church to attend, telling them how impactful these four days can be in their life, their marriage, and the life of your church. Lastly, I ask you to prayerfully consider paying for your youth leader(s) and their spouse(s) to join us in Phoenix.

To register for The Summit, check out our new pages on the NAB website at nabconference.org/the-summit.
As the North American Baptist Conference of churches, we mark time by Triennials. Every three years, we gather together for support and connection, for challenge and encouragement, and for decision-making through a business session. For the past three years, I have served as the moderator of the NAB in addition to my usual role as lead pastor of Grace Baptist Church in Calgary, Alberta. I truly love this community of faith. My parents were immigrants from Germany who came to North America in need of a place to call home, not just to rest their heads but also a home church. They found this home in an NAB church, and I have as well.

I have had the opportunity as moderator to see the benefit of working together as a group of churches. There are things we can do better together as a conference of churches than we can do alone. I have seen the heart and passion for God’s Kingdom displayed in the incredible group of regional ministers. I have had a chance to work together with the staff at the International Office and have been blessed by their desire to serve and to further the work and reach of God’s Kingdom. I have heard reports of God shaping our churches and causing us to be on mission wherever God has placed us. I have spoken to church planters who want to be used by God to transform their communities. I have met with missionaries who are committed to sharing the Gospel in various ways and nations across the world. I have been blessed by being moderator.
As moderator, I have also had the opportunity to chair the governing boards of the NAB, as well as the business session of the Triennial Conference in Edmonton. Triennial marked the end of my service as moderator and the transition to past moderator, which grants me a seat on the Governing Board for the next three years. The current moderator is Mike McNeff, lead pastor of RockRidge Church in Murrieta, California.

The business session at the 2018 Triennial was marked by a great sense of unity and peace. There was time set aside on two different days for business sessions, but the business was completed on the first day. The delegates of these business sessions come from the churches of our conference. For those of you who are unfamiliar with the process, each NAB church has the opportunity to have their pastor or church-designated staff person as a delegate. In addition, they can send one delegate per fifty members or any fraction thereof. These delegates decide what the business that concerns our conference of churches. This business involves who we are as people of God and how we do what we do as a group of churches in the Kingdom of God. It determines our leadership and our leadership structure.

One of the major items on the agenda was a revision of the NAB constitution. This change is something we have been working toward for the past nine years. We have had various task forces and many meetings on the possible changes. In essence, the major change was to move from a two-board system to a one-board system that includes members-at-large elected by the delegates.

There have been multiple groups that worked on this revision in the past three years. It was fine-tuned by the Constitutional Change Committee, which was chaired by Ron Norman. There were many presentations to various groups to seek their input and make changes to the draft. When Ron presented the revision at Triennial, there was little further input given from the floor. Even though a two-thirds vote in favor of the revision was needed for it to pass, a much higher percentage than that voted in affirmation.

A second item of business was the election of the officers and members-at-large for the new Governing Board. This too was done with little discussion. The last item of business concerned the Florida Association, which had become just one church. This was obviously less than ideal. This church had asked to join the Southern Association for fellowship and connection, which would leave the Florida Association with no churches. The recommendation to dissolve the Florida Association passed overwhelmingly.

The rest of the business session involved reports from Executive Director Dan Hamil about things that are happening within the NAB. We also had reports from our cooperating organizations: Church Investors Fund, Taylor Seminary, and Sioux Falls Seminary.

I want to say again that the business session of the 2018 Triennial Conference was marked by great unity and peace. There was prayer concerning each item that came up for decision, and there was joy in being able to come together as God’s people and with God’s leading to make decisions that directed the NAB.

I can truly say it was a joy to serve the pastors, leaders, and churches within our conference as the NAB moderator for the past three years. To God be the glory. Great things He has done.

Books Written by Triennial Speakers

Barry Jones

Dwell
Barry Jones uses the example of Christ making His dwelling among us as the basis for how we should live as His followers. He details what it looks like to live like the incarnate Christ, missionally engaging the world around us out of a deep dependence on God.

Stephanie Fast

She Is Mine
Abandoned at age four she roamed the bleak, war-ravaged countryside of South Korea for three years and was finally left for dead. But the Creator had other plans for Stephanie and revealed them through the words, "She Is Mine."
Mark Buchanan

Hidden in Plain Sight

Mark Buchanan shares a treasure from Scripture that the vast majority of readers overlook, helping believers break their old habits, keep old wounds from reopening, and keep old fears from resurfacing to move into the purpose-filled life God intended for them.

The Rest of God

Mark Buchanan states that what we’ve really lost is “the rest of God—the rest God bestows and, with it, that part of Himself we can know only through stillness.” Jesus practiced Sabbath among those who had turned it into a dismal thing, a day for murmuring and finger-wagging, and He reminded them of the day’s true purpose: liberation—to heal, to feed, to rescue, to celebrate, to lavish and relish life abundant.

Your God Is Too Safe

Here’s a thoughtful, probing exploration of why Christians get stuck in the place of complacency, dryness, and tedium—and how to move on to new levels of spiritual passion! Buchanan shows how the majority of Christians begin their spiritual journey with excitement and enthusiasm, only to get bogged down in a “borderland”—an in-between space beyond the “old life” but short of the abundant, adventurous existence promised by Jesus. Citing Jonah, he examines the problem of “borderland living”—where doubt, disappointment, guilt, and wonderlessness keep people in a quagmire of mediocrity—then offers effective ways to get unstuck and move into a bold, unpredictable, exhilarating walk with Christ.

Don Davis

Get Your Pretense On!: Living as a Citizen and Ambassador of the Kingdom of God

Some years ago, the apologist C. S. Lewis challenged disciples of Jesus in his classic little Christian primer, Mere Christianity, to live true to their new identities as children of God. Building on that important motif, Don Davis issues a similar call to Christ followers. He calls every believer in Christ to understand and embrace their true identities as both citizens and ambassadors of the Kingdom of God. This book outlines a biblical and doctrinal perspective designed to help you know what it means to act worthy of your true, redeemed status and position and to make a difference in the roles where Jesus has placed you. Take your place as a Kingdom citizen and ambassador and represent the King with honor in your unique circle of relationships!

Building Bridges, Scaling Walls: Learning the Art of Edifying Dialogue

The level of division and alienation in American society today is high and appears to be rising. The most important skill necessary to overcome this estrangement will be careful and clear dialogue, the kind that respects those who disagree with us while making plain our beliefs and convictions. This book calls for humility and charity, built on the rules and rhythms of tender-hearted, tough-minded dialogue. Grasping the principles contained within it will enable us in dialogue to engage the great and thorny issues of our day while learning the art of speaking the truth in love.
The city of Edmonton, Alberta, was established in 1795 at the junction of the Saskatchewan and Sturgeon Rivers as a fortified trading post for the Hudson’s Bay Company. A wonderful replica of the trading post stands today at Fort Edmonton Park, where thousands of visitors meander each year and consider the realities of days gone by. In the decades surrounding Edmonton’s establishment, a trading post on the wide-open prairie was necessary as a gathering place because surviving and thriving in this wild landscape had its challenges. Travelers and those who called this region home experienced seasons of torrential rain, driving snow, and gusting winds. The pace of transportation for both people and goods was slow to begin and even slower in the long darkness of the winter months. With little medical care available, illnesses and injuries turned serious quickly.

A trading post became an oasis. It was a place of safety, where shelter from the weather and the wild could be found; it was a place of replenishment and refreshment, where new supplies or resources could be obtained; it was a place of social and relational connections, where meals could be shared in community after months of lonely hunting and trapping; and it was a place of redirection, where journeys and adventures into new lands and new opportunities could be launched.

At the 2018 Triennial in Edmonton, attendees found a place of spiritual shelter and safety in the gathering of the NAB family, allowing them to deeply reflect on and learn about spiritual matters for the formation of their own souls. Some found, from a speaker—whether at a plenary session or a breakout—or through a conversation at an exhibit booth, new resources, ideas, or thoughts that would benefit their own growth or their church’s growth. All enjoyed times of fellowship in a great atmosphere of festivity and food.
As you can see, I truly believe the 2018 Triennial was such a significant place and time for the NAB family to come together and be filled through encouragement toward spiritual growth, times of learning, and the formation and renewal of relational connections.

Upon returning home, I have mused in my head and heart regarding the next three-year journey for this conference of churches. Talking with God as I’ve walked each morning on my routine prayer path, I’ve asked Him what part of His great mission we could join Him on, what new adventures He is preparing us for, and what new opportunities He has before us.

Allow me to articulate to you what I believe to be God’s vision for us over the next three years. Not all of these are new, but all are significant paths for our conference of churches to journey.

Every NAB church sending and supporting an NAB missionary so that all nations would know Jesus as Lord

Psalm 96 says, “Say among the nations, ‘The LORD reigns.’ The world is firmly established, it cannot be moved; he will judge the peoples with equity” (NIV). Though the sending and supporting of international missionaries has been a hallmark of the NAB since its inception, in recent decades fewer and fewer international missionaries are being sent by North American churches in general. If each and every NAB church would financially support one NAB missionary, pray for the missionary regularly and diligently, and seek to train and disciple a new generation of missionary candidates, the NAB could exponentially expand the witness of the good news of Jesus to the nations.

Every NAB church partnering with an international ministry or church for mutual learning, love, and support

Around the world, there are brothers and sisters in Christ from various geographies who are worshiping God, witnessing for the Gospel, and serving their local communities. In this era of history, each NAB church has the real opportunity to connect and partner with an international church or ministry. Ministry teams can be exchanges. Concerns between the churches and ministry can be shared and prayed for. Each partner—both North American and international—can learn from the other how God is working in unique and powerful ways.

Every NAB pastor—whether senior pastor or pastoral staff—being formed more and more into the image of Jesus Christ and investing time and energy caring for the formation and health of his or her own soul in community with others

Dallas Willard said that “spiritual formation in the tradition of Jesus Christ is the process of transformation of the inmost dimension of the human being, the heart, which is the same as the spirit or will. It is being formed (really, transformed) in such a way that its natural expression comes to be the deeds of Christ done in the power of Christ.” Pastors serve congregations out of the overflow of their own spiritual depth. As a conference, our desire is for pastors to tap into resources and people who help them continually be transformed in their inmost being in order to serve the church in the Spirit’s power.

Every NAB region or association becoming passionate about church planting and working together to multiply existing churches and launch new congregations into locations where God is working and new churches are needed

It has been some decades since our conference of churches has invested energy into planting a significant number of new churches. As our culture shifts toward a more and more post-Christian era, a great need exists for new churches that can reach new neighborhoods and diverse people groups as they follow God’s mission to seek and save the lost. Our prayer is that existing churches would multiply and that groups of churches would come together to plant new churches all over North America.
Every NAB church reaching across cultures to embrace others with the love and Gospel of Jesus Christ

Both Canada and the United States continue to become more multicultural. As has been stated often by church leaders over the last two decades, God is bringing the nations to us. Our call is to love our neighbor as we love ourselves and to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ to all people, regardless of skin color or ethnicity. Our hearts must mirror the heart of our Lord, who cared so deeply for the least, the lost, the widow, the orphan, and the stranger.

The Edmonton Triennial was truly a fantastic gathering where spiritual refreshment was found in gathering together as the NAB family. Now, though, is the time to open the doors of the past and to walk forward and journey with God to fulfill the mission that He has for the NAB in the coming three years.
When the North American Baptists gather every three years for what has come to be known as Triennial, I’m sure everyone comes with certain expectations concerning what it’s going to be like based on experiences at previous Triennials, past conferences they’ve attended, or even their own personal pasts with both the joys and struggles of ministry and family life. But despite all of these past influential factors—of which I brought plenty of my own to Edmonton last July—it seems that the Holy Spirit had in mind to bring a fresh wind that would transcend these preconceived notions and create new experiences to draw from and remember. This was certainly true for me as I reflect and muse, particularly on NAB Gateway and both the global and local sides of ministry.

Community and Relationship Is the Point

Within the global side of NAB Gateway, for more than six years we have held a philosophy and sequence of ministry for ministries or local churches entering into partnerships. Relationship is first and foremost, followed closely by mutuality, all for the purpose of mission. As a matter fact, you’ll find that vision in Dan Hamil’s article, where he lays out the NAB’s desire that “every NAB church would partner with an international ministry or church for mutual learning, love, and support” (pg. 14).

But what’s recently become clearer to me about the development of these partnerships is that the relationships and community that are formed are the whole point these partnerships exist. It’s important that we discuss how the two partners can meet each other’s needs in various ways, especially within the challenge of how our majority world partners can meet needs that the North American church may have. However, when we realize that the mutual learning, love, and support of relationships and community is the purpose of the entire enterprise, it helps us refocus our attention on what is most important in the development of these partnerships. This is often a hard lesson for task-oriented folks like ourselves here in the West, but quite innate for our church partners in the global south.

It’s also important to note that community and relationship within partnerships of this nature are a current experience of the Kingdom of God and a foretaste of the future we will one day share in that “already, but not yet” Kingdom. Mission outcomes will result from these partnerships as well, but I’ve found it important to not look past the importance of the vital global church networks and connections that partnerships create and the strong, forever relationships that result.

Cross-Cultural Mission Is a Local Task

Through the ministry of Cross-Cultural Equipper Bud Fuchs, NAB Gateway is also focused on providing churches with the right tools to minister to the diaspora peoples of the world (immigrants, international students, etc.) who are right in our own communities. To quote Dan Hamil again, our hope is that “every NAB church would reach across cultures to embrace others with the love and Gospel of Jesus Christ.” To that end, Bud has developed some great training workshops that seek to help churches to do just that.

We live in a multicultural world, no matter where we are. Whether you are in a diverse, cosmopolitan city or a rural, agrarian setting, you can find people within a very short distance of where you call home who are different from you culturally, linguistically, and of course, spiritually. It’s important as the body of Christ that we see these communities and individuals as those God has called us to with the Gospel of the Kingdom. These communities and individuals may, in turn, join us in our local churches, become initiators for culturally new churches, or take the message of the Kingdom back to their home nation, culture, and families. But no matter the outcome, it’s clear that we need to reach out to those locals culturally different than us who haven’t heard the Gospel, and we also need to connect and provide fellowship with believers in our communities who are different from us.

Fresh Wind

Just as the Edmonton Triennial was about connecting the NAB family, at Gateway we strive to connect the global family of God through partnerships and through reaching out locally to those culturally different than ourselves. After all, we are all part of the same family, it’s just that maybe we haven’t yet met and it’s up to the Spirit to connect us, bringing with a fresh wind of new experiences.

From its beginning the Church has always struggled with balance. It doesn’t come naturally to individuals, so I guess it is bound to also be the nature of those gathered in groups, such as the Church.

A generation or two ago the Church was known for its strict view that God was a God to be feared for His justice. He was known to demand that we follow closely His rules of the faith that He so clearly laid down in His book. Those who wanted His blessing had one path to follow, and that involved adherence to the rules. God was known first and foremost as a God of Justice. It was clear how He worked and those He blessed followed them closely.

We know this left the Church lacking in grace – as many of us grew up in such churches and felt that there had to be more to the character of God. After all, scripture was full of examples of His grace and mercy as well, but the Church rarely emphasized that part of God. So to counter this one-sided view of God, we started to focus on God’s merciful side, accentuating those parts of His personality. For a while this worked. As long as those who held the positions of authority in the church were of the old mindset, the “new” view of God acted as a healthy counterweight to that strict view of God that had missed the mark in many ways.

The problem now is that those who protested the old ways are now the people in authority in our churches. They have gone from being a counterbalance of the “old way,” to being the mainstream authorities in our churches. This has left us right back where we started.

Now in our churches we hear almost nothing about God but His mercy and grace. The results of this view of God are now becoming clear to anyone who is taking note. It has left us with a Church where we don’t practice discipline because God is a God of love who understands that we are weak and lazy.

The people of God have been here before, not only in the Old Testament, but also in more recent history of the Church, and the results are still not pretty.

We are now all quite clear on the idea that God is merciful and full of grace. After all, we know He died for us while we were yet sinners. However, like a good father does, He refuses to leave us in a state of uselessness. The reality is that He is also a God of justice who demands that we also act justly in alignment with His enlightened laws that He has given to us for the betterment of all.

Micah 6:8, the famous passage that we all know, lays it out succinctly. We are first instructed to act JUSTLY, while at the same time loving MERCY. God gave us this formula because it is simply the right path and in alignment with His own character.

Moses proclaimed God’s character in Exodus 34:6–7 as well. “The Lord, the Lord, the compassionate and gracious God, slow > to anger, abounding in love and faithfulness, maintaining love to thousands, and forgiving wickedness, rebellion and sin. Yet He does not leave the guilty unpunished; He punishes the children and their children for the sin of the parents” (NIV).

In other words, we can be forgiven, but our actions will still have consequences for us and others. Anytime the church overemphasizes either nature of God, things begin to go wrong in the church.

The wise still realize that God is capable of being both merciful and just at the same time; that He forgives us, but He disciplines us as well. It might be time for the church to begin again to emphasize the just aspects of His nature...if we are to get back on track. Otherwise God will discipline His Church and it may not feel as loving as we would like.

Have you ever considered establishing a Charitable Remainder Trust (CRT) with Church Investors Fund? If you are looking for some tax benefits, while also producing an income from it, you might want to consider setting one up.

A CRT will allow you to donate to Church Investors Fund, receive a consistent income for life and provide you with a substantial tax break. Under the terms of the trust, Church Investors Fund would be appointed trustee to produce an income for you for life. Upon your passing, Church Investors Fund would receive any remaining funds and continue to put it to work again and again to help build churches – allowing your money to work in God’s kingdom long after you are gone.

A CRT can also produce a substantial tax deduction for you to reduce your tax bill immediately, with some of the value passing to Church Investors Fund.

If you are interested in setting up a Charitable Remainder Trust, please call us at 1-800-543-2343 and speak with Les Collins at ext. 235, Bob Glim at ext. 230, or Igor Mokhov at ext. 236. We are here to serve.

Example

Your Situation
- Gift Amount: $100,000
- Income Recipient Age: 70

Your Benefits
- Payment Rate from CeIF: 6.0%
- Annual Income for Life: $6,000
- Charitable Deduction: $46,827

*all figures are an example only and would change based on tax bracket, marital status, and ages.

Church Investors Fund does not give tax, retirement, or investment advice and encourage, interested parties to seek such advice from their tax counsel and investment advisor.

Q: Would you tell us about your family?
DH: Geri and I met at NABC (now Taylor) in Edmonton, Alberta. We have been married for forty-five years. We have three adult children. Our son and family live in California, and our two daughters are in Texas. We have four grandkids: two in California and two in Texas.

Q: What led you to becoming a pastor/serving in ministry?
DH: I grew up in a pastor’s family and was certain from an early age that God was calling me to pastoral ministry. There was never any pressure from my parents, but my experience in a pastor’s home was very positive and encouraging. As a typical kid, I thought about other things, but was never serious about anything other than pastoral ministry. My favorite story of the Bible has always been Samuel.

Q: What is the most challenging part of serving in ministry?
DH: To be patient and let God do his work in his time. It is also difficult to take the time to simply enjoy the presence of God, rather than always doing the “work.”

Q: What energizes you?
DH: Stories of lives transformed by the power of the Gospel never get old. I love to interact with church leaders about what God is up to in their community and how they can join him on that mission. Any conversation that moves us from contentment with the status quo is a good conversation.

Q: What is your life verse?
DH: Ephesians 2:10: “For we are God’s masterpiece. He has created us anew in Christ Jesus, so we can do the good things he planned for us long ago.” (NLT)

Q: Why or how did God lead you to serve as regional minister (or what led you)?
DH: The local church is where it is at, but in my ministry journey God has blessed me with a great variety: church staff, director of New Day, church planting, on staff at the NAB International Office, and lead pastor. I find that the training and experience gained through that journey prepared me for the regional minister role. So, when I was asked to serve, it seemed that God had been preparing me for this.

Q: What do you most enjoy about serving as regional minister?
DH: Every church and pastor is unique. I enjoy hearing their stories. God has wired me to enjoy variety, so I enjoy the fact that every day brings new opportunities. But mostly I enjoy working with pastors and church leaders as they discover what God is doing in their ministry area and join Him in it.

Q: How can we pray for you?
DH: Wisdom to pay attention to the things that God cares about, not the things I care about.
The Lehotsky Lazarus Award was formed to honor the lateRev. Harry Lehotsky, who was a man willing to stand up and look out for people’s welfare in the Winnipeg community and help them gain new life. He brought hope and compassion to a community that appeared to have none. We present this award at the NAB Triennial Conference to those who demonstrate a commitment to transforming lives within their own community.

At the 2018 Triennial Conference in Edmonton, Alberta, we were blessed to award the Lehotsky Lazarus Award to Daniel Schuster, of the Jesus Loves You Society (JLYS) in Calgary, Alberta.

Daniel grew up in a North American Baptist church alongside his dad, Pastor Sieg Schuster. While attending high school in Manitoba, Daniel first met Harry Lehotsky. He even helped Harry take pickaxes to the basement of one of Harry’s first ministry houses and was blessed to see firsthand the relationships Harry was building within the community. It was these memories that began to nurture the seeds that would eventually blossom into the ministry you now see at JLYS. Daniel later served as a youth pastor for Central Baptist Church in Edmonton and then Brentview Baptist Church in Calgary, but he always felt God calling him to do something more with his life. So, in 2003 he found clarity from God and stepped out in faith to care for a broken group of people in the Calgary community.

Over the past fifteen years, Daniel Schuster has faithfully led the Jesus Loves You Society “Centre for Families” in downtown Calgary. This non-profit, charitable organization, attempts to reach out and serve low income or working poor single moms and children.

JLYS strives to nurture their physical and emotional needs. They create a supportive environment where they can rest, be vulnerable, forge friendships, and share a healthy home-cooked meal together. It’s a safe place for them to share the hurts and joys, share stories, and cry and laugh with each other.

JLYS provides them with groceries from their food bank and gently used clothes that were graciously donated. They help them secure housing when needed. If there is a need, they do everything they can to help meet that need.

They also aim for faith to be strengthened and hope to be renewed through encouragement and prayer. The JLYS serves as a safe place for God to be at work in their lives.

They even created a space for the children where they can laugh, play, be creative, and truly find joy in their lives.

While the Centre for Families is structured around five consistent meal gatherings each week, it essentially serves as a resource hub, providing advocacy for those trying to maneuver through Child and Family Services, the Alberta Works welfare system, or the complexities of for Families’ consistently cares for about 300 low-income moms and their children.

The Jesus Loves You Society receives no government funding and operates with only two full-time and three part-time staff, but continues to thrive through the selfless generosity of the committed team of volunteers. Daniel Schuster and this team of servant leaders certainly do not work to achieve notoriety or recognition in the arena of social justice. Neither are they concerned with simply raising awareness regarding the issues facing women and children in poverty. Instead, they choose to simply live out the profound truth of Jesus’ love, proving a sense of worth to those who struggle with discovering hope and dignity.

Under Daniel Schuster’s visionary leadership, the Jesus Loves You Society has truly embodied the Biblical principle found in 1 Peter 4:8–11 (MSG) which declares, “Most of all, love each other as if your life depended upon it. Love makes up for practically anything. Be quick to give a meal to the hungry, a bed to the homeless—cheerfully. Be generous with the different things God gave you, passing them around so all get in on it: if words, let it be God’s words; if help, let it be God’s hearty help. That way, God’s bright presence will be evident in everything through Jesus, and he’ll get all the credit as the One mighty in everything.”

I thoroughly enjoyed connecting with many at Triennial and at the White Cross Open House! I am so thankful for all of the faithful workers across North America. Recently, I have been reflecting on the long and successful history of White Cross, and I believe its success has been due in part to the close communication with those in the field and quick response to their needs.

One of the ways this used to occur is through the use of quotas. Each region was given specific targets, and those quotas were then met by the active groups. I sometimes wish we could still function that way; it would make my job easier, but that’s not the goal of White Cross. The quota system worked well when the medical work was smaller. However, the work has been growing tremendously. This is very exciting and also challenging. I have been asking myself what the best way to meet these growing needs is. The general principle is the same: adapting to the changing needs of the field. Some traditional items—such as baby layettes—are still very important. The biggest change in the past few years has been the expanding need for medical and dental equipment and supplies. The new handbook seeks to highlight these needs and will hopefully be updated online on a yearly basis.

As I dream of the future, I imagine a growing group of volunteers who continue to pay attention to the specifics of these changing needs, as many are already doing. I also hope that volunteers continue to provide a growing and diverse set of skills to reflect the growing variety of needs. We still need those who are committed to the production of the traditional items. We also need those who can utilize their medical and dental contacts to provide needed equipment and supplies. Moreover, as part of my dream I hope to see more volunteers involved in the transportation industry who can help develop a cost-effective network to deliver these materials to the national depots.

Someone recently asked me whether White Cross will ever cease to function. Maybe, when it no longer serves any real needs. However, if we continue to adjust to the needs in Cameroon, encourage others to come alongside, and support the work of White Cross generously with our time, expertise, and gifts, I see it having a long and fruitful future.
